After retirement he enjoyed spending time with his wife surrounded with his family. He will always be remembered for being the loving husband, dad, grandad, great-grandad, brother and friend. His humble, simple way has taught his family so much that can never be forgotten. “The road must be built, and you are the man to do it.” This quote from the Union Pacific Railroad is one that our beloved Pedro understood and took to heart. Pedro began his career with the Union Pacific Railroad at age 18. The demand for physical labor was great at that time as building the railways was done by hand not with the present-day machinery that we have become accustomed to. He began as a track spiker and worked his way up to be the Foreman until he retired. By the sweat of his brow, he labored out of love for his wife and family. He and his wife married at a very young age. The beginning of a beautiful love that would bless this world with his five children. A road that he and his wife would begin building together. A road that led them to build their family with love and laughter. A family he and his wife nourished together not only with their love but with the love of God. A love that would bless them with 55 years of marriage. After retirement, he and his wife enjoyed spending all their time together. On different occasions, they would tell their kids, “We are leaving for Louisiana, be back in a couple of days”. They enjoyed this time together and his children enjoyed seeing them spend this time away. At home, it was always a place of love and togetherness: sharing meals together, sitting outside together and waiting for the next visit from his grandchild or child. Always a joy that he experienced with what brought him the most fulfillment – his family. Though Pedro became ill, he never allowed that to keep him from still going on and enjoying the beauty of life. While he endured his suffering, it never took away from him the opportunity to sit with his family and enjoy a meal or just to sit there and enjoy their company. In his way, he was still teaching his family. The quote above reminds us, his family, his life with his wife (our mom) built a road of love that we travel together and together is the only way to maintain it. And that is, that as a family: we laugh together, joke together, we cry together and work things out together. On this road of love, together we will be able to overcome all trials and challenges that we face in life. It is for this reason that this gentle, humble and loving husband, dad, grandad and great-grandad, brother and friend will be so greatly missed. The lesson of his life has taught his family that with gentleness, humility and love, the road of our lives will never crumble, never grow weak and never have an end. It will stay strong and lead you to be together and be what God gave you to have and enjoy – time together. There is no greater wealth than this. He was preceded in death by his parents, Francisco and Juanita Elizardo; his wife’s parents, Matilde and Martha Torres; his brothers, Ignacio Elizardo and Ubenze Elizardo; his uncle, Tio Pete Elizardo, two nephews, Marco Elizardo and Anthony Torres.
